what does white label mean?

Basically a white label product or service is a product that one company creates and it is rebranded and resold by other companies legally as their own product or service.

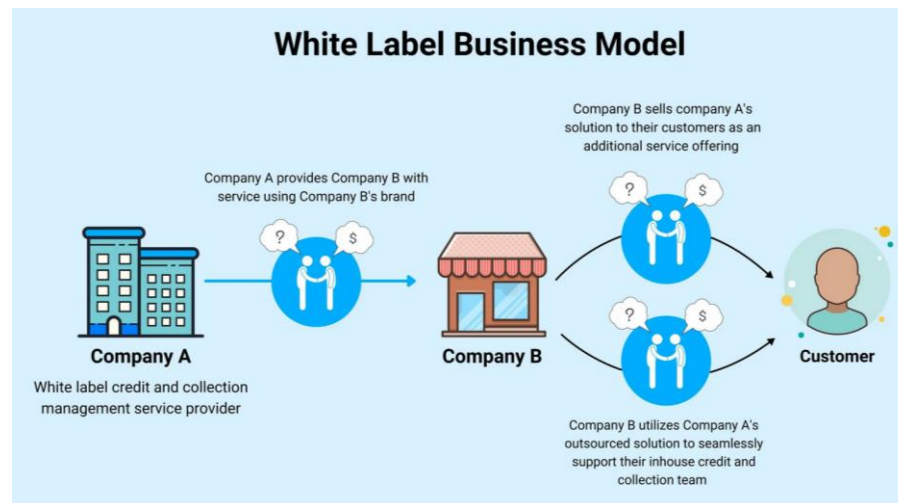

Consider this real life example:

According to bumper to bumper radio, “there are three major automotive starting flooded battery manufacturers in the United States. There are four absorbed glass-mat (AGM) starting battery manufacturers and there are four flooded deep cycle battery/major deep cycle battery manufacturers in the United States.”

Now think about it.

If you go to any local auto parts store, or big box store that sells car batteries, you’d be hard pressed to find no less than a dozen brands of batteries on their shelves. This is white labeling in the flesh. Those 11 manufacturers mentioned above white label their products for other companies to brand as their own.

It’s actually a pretty common practice.

what are the benefits of white label design?

- ❑ More free time to focus on your business

You can focus on your other marketing services or day-to-day business matters knowing that our expert designers and developers are on the job and working for you.

- ❑ You can take on more customers

Don't turn away business because you're too busy to fulfill it. We've got you covered.

- ❑ More services to offer your clients

You can easily add design and development to your services offered without buying costly equipment and/or personnel.

- ❑ You take all of the credit

White label means your label. Your clients will sing your praises, not ours. Our team works quietly in the background as part of your team.

- ❑ More money, more money, more money

Whether expanding your services or taking on more clients, white labeling allows your company to take on more work, which means more sales.
